

SUBWAY REPORT MADE-ONLY FOR SOUTH BROOKLYN

Big Plan Isn't Touched at All in Transit Committee's Latest Effort.

The Transit Committee of the Board of Estimate has at last filed a subway report, but the report is simply a first installment and deals only with proposed subway lines and elevated extensions for the relief of South Brooklyn.

The big system of subways and extensions as originally—and still—demanded is not touched upon, except in relation to the proposed Staten Island connection.

The report bears out the statement made in The Evening World yesterday, that the subway territory will be divided between the two transit trusts, the Brooklyn combination to get the Broadway-Lexington route, the Fourth Avenue, Brooklyn loop, Broadway and Fifty-ninth street, and lines to Astoria and Corona in Queens, while the Interborough gets the Seventh Avenue line from Forty-second street down, the Lexington Avenue line from Thirty-second street up and the Steinway tunnel into Queens.

In Brooklyn the Interborough is also to get the Lafayette and Eastern Parkway extensions. At least these are the plans as at present partly formulated and both companies are said to be agreeable.

The conference has come to the conclusion, with reference to South Brooklyn, that the lines to be adopted as a basis for inviting proposals should be as follows:

An extension of the present Fourth Avenue line from Forty-third street to a four-track subway to a point to be later determined, where connection can be made with an extension to Staten Island, and thence as a two-track subway to High Street.

An extension of the Fourth Avenue subway through Thirty-ninth street as a three-track subway to New Utrecht Avenue and thence as a three-track elevated line to Coney Island.

The conference declares that in coming to their conclusions they carefully considered the original plans for the Tri-Borough system, and add:

"It has been suggested, as an alternative to this plan, that elevated lines be generally substituted for the lines included in the Tri-Borough system, for South Brooklyn."

THESE ROBINS GET JAGS.
Georgia Birds Fill Up on "Licker"
From China Berries.

LYNN, Ga., Feb. 14.—Robins in this vicinity have acquired habits of inebriety. The "bird licker" that intoxicates them is believed to be obtained from China berries which grow in profusion near here.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

Many of the robins that have been found in a "drunken" condition have been watched during the time of their intoxication, watching being careful to keep out at a safe distance, and it has been observed that in a few hours the birds revive and immediately go back to the China berry trees.

OCTOGENARIAN WIFE OF JUSTICE PRYOR WHO DIED TO-DAY.

MRS. R. A. PRYOR

DEATH TAKES WIFE OF JUSTICE PRYOR AT THE AGE OF 82

Author, One of America's Famous Women, Passes Away
After Eventful Life.

Mrs. Roger A. Pryor, author and wife of Justice Pryor, died at her home to-day, No. 3 West Sixty-ninth street, at the age of eighty-two years. For some time she had been a sufferer from anæmia, and the end was expected. Her remarkable career and the fame of her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

In spite of being a leader of the select few, Mrs. Pryor's inclinations were toward city life. She was organizer and first president of the Daughters of the American Revolution and later became honorary vice-president for life. She was vice-president of the Martha Washington Memorial Association, charter member of the Virginia Society for the Preservation of Antiquities and a prominent Colonial dame.

Intensely literary, author of several books and patroness of art, she held high away over exclusive circles, both in the North and South. She was generally accorded a place in the list of famous women of America.

Her husband made the name of Pryor almost a household word for over fifty years. Sixty-four years ago, at Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Pryor, whose family was one of the oldest in America, married the Justice, then a dashing young Southerner. At the time of her marriage she was the belle of the South and the toast of Virginia banquets. Her husband, a Virginian, descended directly from Bacon and five of the early Jamestown days, she rapidly signed her name to the great things. During the Civil War she was among the first to take the field as a nurse, following her husband, who was a general in the Confederate Army, and later a minister in the Confederate Congress.

Allcock's PLASTERS

For Coughs and Colds put one on chest and another between shoulder blades. It breaks up the congestion (the cause of colds) before it can reach the lungs.

Constipation, Bilelessness, Indigestion, etc.
Brandreth's Pills
Entirely Vegetable.

Franklin Simon & Co.

Fifth Avenue, 37th and 38th Sts.

SPECIAL SALE FRIDAY

High Grade Fur Coats and Furs

For Women and Misses

At One-half Former Prices

Quality of Skins and Workmanship Guaranteed.

High Grade Pony Coats
Full length models. Heretofore $69.50 37.50

Caracul Fur Coats
Three-quarter or full-length. Heretofore $69.50 to $119.50 55.00

Moire Pony Coats
Of highest grade skins. Heretofore $125.00 75.00

Fur Trimmed Seal Coats
Of French seal, spade collar. Heretofore $145.00 85.00

Moire Caracul Coats
Of highest grade skins. Heretofore $195.00 98.50

Real Hudson Seal Coats
High grade skins, roll collar. Heretofore $295.00 145.00

Handsome Moleskin Coat
Of well matched skins. Heretofore $495.00 285.00

Real Alaska Seal Coat
52 inches long, of real Alaska Seal. Heretofore $1,150.00 595.00

High Grade Fur Sets

Natural Blue Fox Sets
Large Pillow Muff and various model Scarfs. Heretofore $185.00 98.50

Kid Fox Sets
Double Animal Scarf and Animal Shaped Muff (dyed Silver Fox color). Heretofore $110.00 57.50

White Fox Sets
Various model Scarfs. Heretofore $69.50 37.50

Large Pillow Muffs. Heretofore $69.50 37.50

Pointed Sitka Fox Sets
Large Pillow Muff. Heretofore $69.50 36.50

Large animal shaped Scarf. Heretofore $69.50 36.50

Black Lynx Sets
Large Pillow Muff. Heretofore $65.00 35.00

Various model Scarfs. Heretofore $65.00 35.00

Civet Cat Sets
Large Pillow Muff. Heretofore $45.00 23.50

Long straight Stole. Heretofore $49.50 29.50

Long straight Stole. Heretofore $49.50 29.50

Long straight Stole. Heretofore $49.50 29.50

Long straight Stole. Heretofore $49.50 29.50

33 Years' Leaders of Fashion Simpson Crawford Co. SIXTH AVE. 19TH TO 20TH STREET, NEW YORK

Advance Sale Misses' New Spring Dresses

An Introductory Style Exposition and Special Sale Which Offers the Handsomest and Newest Fashion Ideas. Values $18.75 to $22.50, at the Special Price of $14.75

THE fashionable young miss will, of course, think first of the new styles and their adaptability to the important business of distinguishing her personal attractions. And with rare skill our designers have used their arts to fit the styles to the charms and wishes of youth.

But while you are admiring the beauty and smartness of the Dresses we don't want you to miss the significance of the special prices we quote in this sale. Early orders obtained liberal price concessions from makers and these substantial savings are yours.

We have an array of dresses possessing all those thoroughly distinctive features of fashionable exclusiveness and youthful individuality that are the undisputed right of New York's younger set. These sizes, 14 and 16 years, give fittings (nearly always without alterations) to misses and slender women.

Dresses That Show the Latest Paris Ideas
Beautiful new frocks in the very smartest of Parisian styles are shown in this large collection, which includes changeable chiffon taffeta, voiles, lingerie and embroidered nets. The smart taffeta frocks, distinctly original in style, are trimmed with macramé laces and pleatings; particularly interesting is the assemblage of lingerie and net dresses, refined and exclusive in trimming of fine Val and hand-made laces. Made in 14 and 16 year sizes, also adapted to the women of medium size. $14.75

Misses' Smart Gingham Dresses at $3.95
Dainty Dutch neck model, smartly designed and prettily trimmed with embroidery insertion and pearl buttons. Sizes 14 and 16 years. Value $5.95.

Misses' Dainty New Dresses at $5.95
Very attractive frocks, copies of the more exclusive models, made of embroidered marquisette, lingerie, washable corduroy, French linen and voiles. Included are stunning tailored styles, beautifully hand embroidered or inset with needlework, also the more clinging frock, richly embellished with Val, or antique laces. Sizes 14 and 16 years. Values to $10.00.

FRANKO'S ORCHESTRA AND Mlle. CANTARELLI, RESTAURANT, DAILY

All the Rest of Our Women's Winter Coats That Were Formerly Priced Up to $24.75—Some Higher $8.75

All the Rest of Our Women's Winter Suits That Were Formerly Priced Up to $25—Some Higher $8.75

5,000 Yards of Double Width
Imp. Chiffon Cloth, 59c
Our Usual Price is $1.25

THE heavy French Chiffon Cloth that dressmakers, costumers and others find invaluable for its durability and soft draping quality. Just now when the demand is tremendous you are offered this beautiful material at less than the actual cost to land it here from France. Used in profusion for tunics, entire gowns, draperies on gowns, Russian blouses, princess slips, etc. The following shades are included in this sale:

White Ivory Black Navy Brown Lt. Blue Pink Lavender American Beauty Champagne King Blue Gobiin Blue Seal Gray Mauve National Gold

$3.50 Coat Sweaters, $1.98
A welcome and timely special offer.

OF course the cozy, comfortable, protecting warmth of a sweater is especially appreciated in Winter. But our Sweater is a four season garment; there is no time when it is out of season—no time when it is not an indispensable part of the well-dressed woman's wardrobe.

$3.50 Sweater Coats, $1.98
All-wool Coat Sweater of plain, closely-woven stitch, in shawl or storm collar; single or double-breasted, 34 to 44. In white, gray and cardinal.

$4.00 Sweater Coats, $2.98
Fitted worsted Coat Sweaters with sailor collar, in self or contrasting border, shawl collar, double-breasted, splendid length, just reaches below hips. In white, gray and cardinal. All sizes.

Children's $1.00 School Sweaters, 79c
All-wool worsted, durable, close